Objectives

The aim of the workshop is to publicize the research activities carried out by the GRIFA and MGPR. These two associations bring together researchers from Italy and the whole of the Mediterranean basin who are studying xenobiotics, in particular pesticides, with regard to their environmental and residual impact and risk evaluation. The GRIFA and MGPR members represent teams that have co-ordinated their interdisciplinary work for a number of years.

The workshop, besides offering the chance to inform the scientific world as regards the results obtained, aims at stimulating a profitable comparison of experiences to which anyone wishing to take part can contribute.

About Catania

Catania is dramatically situated between the Ionian Sea and Mount Etna, Europe's highest active volcano. As well as ruins from the ancient city, the town boasts a wealth of fine Baroque architecture.

Catania is a city with a strong personality, dominated by the looming bulk of Etna, which every so often rains ash down onto the streets. The city has a lot to offer tourists, though, and has recently been making an increased effort to promote itself as a tourist destination, and not just a base from which to visit the legendary volcano. Founded by Greek colonists, Catania was subsequently conquered by Syracuse and then, during the Punic Wars, by the Romans. One of the most significant events which shaped Catania was the earthquake of 1693, which devastated most of south-eastern Sicily. The town was re-built in Baroque style, and it was during this era that many of the town's finest buildings came into being.

Etna is the highest European volcano, its vast bulk bolstered by millennia of eruptions. Catania makes a good starting-point for volcanic excursions. The small towns around the National Park are interesting and worth touring if you're spending some time in the area.

How to reach Catania

Catania has an airport linked on a daily basis to the most important Italian and International airports.

The international "Fontanarossa" airport is only 5 km away from the city centre, the conference centre and the hotels.

A bus service is available from the airport to the city centre; terminating at Catania railway station. The trip lasts about 15 minutes. Taxis are also available from the airport to the city centre.
